Overview

This document provides model contract clauses for parties who would like future disputes referred to arbitration, expedited arbitration or mediation under the London Chamber of Arbitration and Mediation (LCAM).

The following model contract clauses are for use in commercial contracts. When drafting clauses, care must be taken to avoid ambiguity. The model clauses provide that, should the parties to a contract become involved in a dispute, they should endeavour to resolve it through ADR. An effective clause will clearly identify the set of rules or procedures to be followed, the trigger for the process, the dispute resolution process itself, and when appropriate, the timetable. Below is a note on different options and some issues to consider in selecting the appropriate process together with our model clauses.

Selecting an ADR clause

Set out below are the following model clauses for use in commercial contracts:

- Escalation Clause
- Arbitration Clause
- Expedited Arbitration Clause
- Arb-Med-Arb Clause
- Mediation Clause
- Notice Clause

Here are some issues to consider when deciding which ADR clause to put in your contract:

- How complex is any potential dispute likely to be?
If your contractual arrangements are complex then any potential dispute is likely to be too. The converse is also true.

- Is there likely to be any urgent supply chain or other issue which requires the potential dispute to be resolved as quickly as possible?
- Is it important to have a full airing of the issues in dispute with a written decision e.g. to show shareholders, a parent company, a regulator?
- Is confidentiality important?
- Do you want to reach a financial settlement and agree a commercial way forward?
- Is your dispute international?
- Is language an issue?
- What are the characteristics of your counter party – size, business experience, management, level of sophistication, combative, cooperative or commercial?

This note is not a substitute for legal advice. There are many factors to consider when deciding which dispute resolution method is best for your commercial agreements and some aspects of them may be better resolved through different dispute resolution mechanisms. There are also questions such as which law should govern the contract, what the seat of any arbitration should be, the best venue for any hearings and, most importantly, the question of enforcement. We recommend you take legal advice in relation to which clause is most appropriate and which would make most sense for your business. You may use different clauses for different agreements or even for different elements of the same agreement. The clauses may also need to be tailored so that they “fit” with the language and structure of your agreements.

Information about each clause

Below are some key things you may find helpful to know about each of the clauses.

1. Escalation Clause

This clause provides that the parties will try a series of measures to resolve their dispute: discussions between senior executives, mediation in accordance with LCAM Model Mediation Procedures and then, in the event settlement is not achieved, arbitration in accordance with LCAM Arbitration Rules as a means of final determination. The parties must attempt each step before moving on to the next one. The clause provides for you to insert a timeframe within which each step is to be completed, and, if the dispute is not resolved within that timeframe, then the parties move to the next step. This clause provides the parties the best opportunity to settle the dispute among themselves. This clause is useful where the parties wish to preserve an ongoing commercial relationship.

2. Arbitration Clause

This clause provides that the parties will try to resolve their dispute by way of arbitration pursuant to LCAM's Arbitration Rules. Arbitration is a confidential process in which a neutral third party or parties (the tribunal), is appointed by the parties, or absent agreement by LCAM. The tribunal reviews written and oral submissions and then issue a written decision known as an award. Unlike court, the parties have a greater degree of control and flexibility over the process. They can agree certain procedural issues such as if, how and when documents are to be exchanged, what the steps leading up to the hearing will be, where and how the hearing will take place, live or virtual. This clause may be appropriate where mediation is unlikely to resolve the dispute, or where speedy resolution is important. The clause provides for you to insert how many arbitrators will determine the dispute – three is not uncommon but one is more cost-effective. You can also choose the seat of the arbitration – the law of the country you choose as the seat will be the law of the arbitration and the courts of that country will have a supervisory jurisdiction.

3. Expedited Arbitration Clause

This is similar to the clause above but provides for the arbitration to be resolved within a tight timetable of up to six months under LCAM's Expedited Arbitration Rules. These rules contain a 'documents-only' procedure for the resolution of disputes through arbitration by a sole arbitrator appointed by LCAM. The procedure is intended to be straightforward, expedited and cost effective. This clause can be used where it is of utmost importance to have a dispute resolved as quickly as possible. This might be the case where the parties are part of a chain of suppliers or involved in a large project when a dispute might hold up other business or give rise to claims from third parties. The Expedited Arbitration Rules might also be appropriate where the amount in dispute does not justify too much time being spent resolving the dispute. Expert evidence is only permitted if the arbitrator allows it so this procedure would probably not be appropriate for complex disputes requiring expert opinions. Nor would it be appropriate for multiparty disputes or for disputes involving complex issues of fact or law.

4. Arb-Med-Arb Clause

This provides that the parties try to resolve their dispute by a form of ADR called Arb-Med-Arb. Essentially, this means the parties start an arbitration, then attempt to resolve the dispute by way of mediation and, if a settlement is reached, the arbitral tribunal may issue an award giving effect to the settlement. This may be useful if you require more flexibility than arbitration alone and believe mediation might resolve the dispute. Having the settlement incorporated into an arbitral award can be useful if you have to take steps to enforce the award in UK or in another country.

5. Mediation Clause

This provides that the parties try to resolve their dispute by way of mediation pursuant to the LCAM Model Mediation Procedures. Mediation is a consensual and confidential process where a neutral third party assists the parties to reach an agreement to resolve their dispute. Even though the mediator does not issue an award or have the power to force the parties to do anything, an experienced mediator can often help parties in dispute to reach a compromise without litigation or arbitration. This can save the parties much time and cost and may have the advantage of preserving a commercial relationship. This clause should be used together with an effective dispute resolution clause.

6. Notice Clause

In order to ensure that an arbitration or mediation gets started promptly and that notice of it reaches the other party quickly, it is useful to set out in the contract the email addresses which the parties agree shall be used for those purposes. This clause can be added to any of the above clauses as an additional paragraph.
